What's new in Pink Hour:

The Gun on the Chickahominy was a Confederate artillery battery stationed along the James River, Virginia. On May 6, 1862, it exchanged volleys with the 9th New York Heavy Artillery at the Battle of Gaines's Mill. It was located just west of the Boydton Plank Road crossing of the Bull Run Aqueduct, about seven miles southwest of the Bull Run battlefield. It was named for the Chickahominy River, which ran south from the battlefield to the Appomattox River. History Background After the fighting at the First Battle of Bull Run on July 21, 1862, the Union army took control of all the strategic railway lines that crossed the Chickahominy River downstream from the battlefield. Soon the Confederate artillery along the river had an unobstructed field of fire. However, the four gun batteries on the west bank and the pack horses were vulnerable to marksmanship from the direction of the battlefield. The batteries, and their effect on the water supply to the Union army, soon became significant concerns. Tactics, artillery, and commanders The battery was established during the middle of May 1862, at Camp Corcoran, which was on the Virginia Peninsula. Captain (Brevet Brigadier General) Ephraim Williams was placed in command of the battery on June 10, after it had been ordered into the Peninsula Campaign. The battery was anchored on the west bank of the Chickahominy, near the junction of the Boydton Plank Road and Bull Run Road. It was positioned on a rise in the countryside, where open sights could command a field of fire along the Boydton Plank Road, toward the old Fort Monroe and Richmond, and down the river. Two batteries of the 32nd Illinois Cavalry also occupied this area. By June 7, Capt. John A. Wilder, Jr., was in charge of the battery. The battery had eight loaded guns, two limbers, and twelve horses. Battle of Gaines's Mill The 9th New York Heavy Artillery moved to the field with three of its batteries, just prior to the Battle of Gaines's Mill. Battle was opened on the morning of May 6, 1862. The 9th New York deployed across the field with the left company, in a line of battle, about one quarter of a mile long. The 9th New York was the only position on the right flank. On the left flank, the 8th New York was in

- Episodic - 24 episodes (E1-E6), episodes are unlocked one by one, and fully playable - All within days of each other, a bit like stealth games - Strategy, a bit like Game of Thrones - It's quite challenging, there's only one life per episode so get shot and finish as you started - Over 3 decades to get the 'Full Adventure' badge - Badges/achievements unlock further content, available via free upgrades - There are no save game points, only a one life per episode achievement - The game is mainly single player, but with other players and AI players online, via the internet, to create a full multiplayer experience. - A bit like a classic stealth game, you see your progress recorded on a map, a set compass, a character you can interact with, the ability to reset various status, etc. What's in it: - 30 achievements, in progress - 5 back stories, one for each episode - 3 maps in each episode, randomly generated and interactive, with branching story paths - 3 weapons - over 60 enemies, including the high risk rebel type enemies - There's more, but that's a bit too much There are other updates and additions to be released, so please check the website regularly. Episode 1: Duty Calls Join the government service as a lone agent. Society is breaking down, health scares, terrorist attacks; citizens have defied the law and armed themselves, etc. A curfew has been instituted, so anyone you meet is suspect, and a viable target, just get out there, collect various documents, valuable items, cash, ammunition and health packs etc. and eliminate any and all opposition. As the game continues, collect experience, cash, artefacts, documents, components etc. These will in later episodes help to discover and expose conspiracies, and contribute to development and procurement of new technologies, all the while earning towards achievement badges.Series back story: [Episodes 1 & 2:] Starting out as a government agent, you slowly realise that all is not as it seems. A viral outbreak is slowly turning people into brainless killing machines. There are rumours the virus is nothing other than a government conspiracy. But first working for the government you must assist by combating the rising number of rebels. [NB: E2 will be released as a
