Empire State Building New York, New York,.Chapel of St. Mary the Virgin, Frankfurt The Chapel of St. Mary the Virgin is a former Roman Catholic chapel in Frankfurt am Main. It was built in 1521, expanded in 1693 and demolished in 1862. History It is supposedly first mentioned in a document of 10 June 1521. 19th-century architect Ludwig Edler von Duvenstedt rebuilt it in 1809, adding an oval, domed altar and a baroque sculpture of Our Lady of Sorrows. However, the architects had exaggerated their abilities by submitting their plans to the public in advance, which brought about their dismissal when the public were not satisfied. Following the demolition of the building, the altar and the sculpture disappeared. The frescoes of the chancel were damaged by bombs in the war and destroyed completely in the then Communist era. The eastern chapel wall had broken in several places and was restored by the work of two Catholic sculptors, Michael Mack and Max Schaeffer. Architectural style A free interpretation of the Renaissance with a residence for the archbishops and the bishops. Gothic and Renaissance elements appear in the framework, which was designed by August Ströhl.
