Yang's comments on the 2020 presidential campaign trail came during a "Politics Nation" podcast on Thursday, a day after the New Hampshire primary. Yang told podcast host Jimmy Bryne that he believes voters should vote in person. "My concern, Jimmy, is that I really feel that we should restore voting rights to people, and the way that we restore voting rights is by getting people who were convicted of felonies, and still have the right to vote, back into the voting rolls in a way that doesn't disenfranchise any other people," Yang said. He added that he had some concerns with the requirement included as part of a one-page state election bill earlier this month. The single page proposed a voter ID requirement in addition to vote-by-mail. Voters without a specific photo ID must show other forms of identification, such as a utility bill, a bank statement, a government check or license with a current address. Bryne asked Yang why he would set a condition that would exclude millions of people. "We did it in California. I had concerns about it when it was first being put forward, and I asked for a bunch of different ways in which we could try to provide an alternative to that. It's not great," Yang responded.
